

THE DESTRA PO CYCLEWAY

km 123,810

From Stellata di Bondeno to Gorino Ferrarese this route crosses the whole of the province of Ferrara, cruising along the embankments of the Po River in very close contact with nature. Through cultural centres, and countryside, at every turn of the pedals the territory unrolls like in a well shot film, rich in the rarified atmosphere typical of the zone.

Start: Bondeno, loc. Stellata

On Roadways: km 20,170 (16%)

Arrival: Goro, loc. Gorino Ferrarese

On cycle track: km 103,640 (81%)

Length of Route: km 123,810

On unmetalled roads: km 3,280 (3%)

A Stellata is right next to the river. Its most prestigious building is its castle, the Rocca Possente, built here at the extreme north of Estense territory to guard their possessions inland. Don't miss the Archaeological Museum with finds from the area over different historical ages; it is located in the former house of Virgilio Ariosto, son of the famous poet Ludovico.

B The embankment road leaves the Po for a few kilometres to run south along the Panaro. This river rises in the Modenese part of the Appennines, and debouches into the Po at one of its most picturesque points, wrapped in a gallery of poplar and willow.

C Bondeno is an agricultural centre whose fortunes are inextricably linked to the Po nearby; it is the most ancient inhabited site in the province. Archaeology shows that the area was populated in the Neolithic era, the Bronze Age, Iron Age, and in Roman times. After that, Bondeno was an Estense possession, fortified for defence.

D Here begins a long straight road, with good views over the water. The next thing we see is the Bosco di Porporana reserve, an example of riverbank woodland and once part of the Ferrara course of the Po, where there are splendid surviving examples of farnia oak, elm, black and white poplar, mulberry and willow.

E Diversion: at Francolino we can come down off the embankment and take the cycle track to Ferrara. This joins with the route from the City Walls to the River Po, described above.

F At Fossadalbero is one of the Este family's former 'delizie', their country retreats, today the 'Country Golf'; this is very probably the place that saw the beginnings of the ill-starred love affair between Ugo and Parisina, respectively son and second wife of Marquis Nicolò III d'Este.

G Over the bridge that connects Ro to Polesella is the expanse of nature reserve known as the 'Mulino del Po', which includes the area immediately around the river and the zone surrounding, made famous in the great novel by Riccardo Bacchelli, 'Il Mulino del Po'. In the tourist marina you can visit the mill moored there, a faithful reproduction of those seen on the Po over 100 years ago, with machinery for grinding corn. The area is laid out for visitors with a café, bicycle hire and a tourist information point.

H The ferry at Berra is situated on the site of what was a mooring for the vessels that transported goods along the river. The river was the fastest and most economic means of transport in the era of poor quality unmade roads.

I Right by the river at Serravalle, where the Po splits in two for the first time to produce the Delta, there is the 'Porta del Delta' tourism centre, equipped especially for fishing. From here there is a wide vista over the wedge of land between the two branches, known as the Isola di Ariano.

L The village of Ariano Ferrarese lies between the Canale Bianco and the right-hand embankment of the Po di Goro; it is joined to the village of Ariano Polesine, in the province of Rovigo, by a modern bridge.

M Mesola can be recognised from a long way away by the majestic bulk of its Estense castle, built on the orders of Duke Alfonso II d'Este at the end of the 16th century on the edge of an immense hunting ground. The whole of the property was enclosed by walls and towers, and it is presumed that the Duke intended to build a city here, but the project was not completed because of the unexpected end of Este rule in the region. The castle is home to the Centre for Environmental Education and the Deer Museum.

From Mesola Castle, the route tackles the wide bend that the Po di Goro makes towards the north, to then turn south for a little over 10 km, outlining one of the most significant natural areas of the Po Delta Park, rich in fresh and salty water wetlands, lagoons, and woodlands of great importance. From the embankment we can also see on the right the long and luxuriant woodland of the Bosco di Santa Giustina.

N The village of Goro looks out onto the Sacca (cove) of the same name, and was founded in the first half of the 18th century between the river and the sea. Today it is a modern port which retains traces of the fishing village it once was. Fishing and mussel farming are the mainstays of its economy.

O Gorino Ferrarese, a village inhabited since 1870, is devoted to fishing and to nature tourism, it is an environment of transition between dry land, lagoons, the river and the sea. From here you can take a boat to discover the natural environments of the Delta as far as the point where the waters of the river lose themselves in those of the sea.

P The Old Lighthouse, the last point on our journey, was replaced by the new lighthouse (in the photo) which is nearer the sea. It can be reached on foot or by boat; it shows how the coastline has been advancing naturally into the sea.
